The Lincoln Era. Republican party. Some carefully-trimmed glittering generalities about freedom, answered for capital; and the blunders, macourse of the Opposition is usually easy; and not furnish any great encouragement. The fry are also in full cry on the same note. first and greatest difficulty which a Republican Administration will encounter will be to satisfy its own party. It is very well to course, but no course will secure a Republican Administration any support outside its own party. What the Opposition want is the control of the Government and the offices, will hail with delight any mistakes of the Administration, no matter how injurious to the public welfare. No matter how conciliatory, or patriotic, or humble and timid, the Lincoln Administration may be, it will meet an opposition as savage and relentless as that which pursued a far purer Adminissupport, and for a re-election, entirely on the party which placed it in power.

A difficulty in the case, or an advantage, according as it may be used, is that an Administration comes into the Executive with the most brilliant expectations on the part Delphic oracle, as to performance; and there needed. The party itself can not propose any. The party comes in as an Anti-slavery party—that is, believing slavery to be very bad where it is not, though tolerable and to extension; and if it were, there is no Terriis there likely to be; nor could it pass any, if the first two conditions existed.

Nor is a Republican Administration going to resist the admission of slave States. A Confederacy made up of States half slave and half free, will not set up exclusion against the admission of another slave State. The impracticable, both from the nature of the case and from the impossibility of carrying the necessary legislation, it is not desirable, No man can really believe the play worth the candle, even if it could be played.

There is nothing that a Republican Administration can do against slavery. What can | its harmony for another long term. This is it leave undone for it? To suppose that it the most probable result of this great "vicwill refuse to execute the laws is folly. Even were a President so disposed, a hostile Congress and Judiciary would find means to bring him to it. The Fugitive-slave Law was never so zealously executed as by Mr. Fillmore, who, when he entered the Executive, was as much an anti-slavery man as were the Northern members of his Cabinet. Much of the hostility to the law will disappear when Republican Commissioners and Marshals execute it; and it will be executed just as faithfully, though probably with less violence and show of fraud than now. And it may be found that with a decent administration of the law, all danger of resist-

There is no influence so conservative as they are the officers to execute the laws. History is a very unpleasant reminiscence in American politics; but it may be rememever made against the Fugitive-slave Law were made by the Northern Democracy, when it was passed and put in operation under a Whig Administration; also, that it was under a Northern Whig Administration, which went into office just as much anti-Blavery in sentiment as Mr. Seward or Lincoln, that the army and navy of the United States were ordered into the service of recapturing negroes; and that then, when the Democracy was filling the air with its outcries against the inhumanity of the law, volunteer companies at Boston and Detroit turned out to aid Whig Commissioners and Marshals in returning fugitives.

And we might refer to another fact, not so generally known, but which a few in this State will remember, that under that Whig Administration the severest penalty ever yet administered for resisting the law, was imposed in Ohio, under the ruling of a Federal Judge who has since been talked of as a Republican candidate for the Presidency, on a lawyer who, it was claimed on his part, acted only as attorney for the fugitives, and did no more than advise them what their rights were. So far as slavery is concerned, there is nothing which a Republican Administration can de or leave undone. Its policy must necessarily be one of inactivity, which may be "masterly" or otherwise, according as it is improved. Can Lincoln satisfy the party with this? A course of inactivity on the great question which holds the party together, which should end by leaving him without a party, and in bringing a Democratic Admintion into power, would not be called "musterly." Unfortunately, or fortunately-we don't know which—a President must have a party in order to make a successful Adminisan Administration, ever so patriotic and con- act of the President, which will be an indefi- NEW ADVERTISEMENTS ellistory, which ends by finishing its own party, will be called a failure. Mr. Lincoln's success depends chiefly on his management of the official patronage. It is sad to mention so gross and material an end to the great contest for freedom. It is sadder still to say that this is the part Hitherto it has all been plain sailing to the of his Administration which requires the greatest moral courage, firmness, judgment and executive ability, and in which he will most likely fail. Suppose we take the hue lignity, and general unpopularity of the and cry of advice which has opened upon Administration, supplied ammunition. The him since the election, from some Republican. quasi-republican, quasi-independent and it ought to be especially so against Mr. Bu- | wholly mercenary journals, as a criterion of chanan's Administration, since his own party | his course. He is voluminously exhorted to finds it necessary to denounce him. But take a conservative course. The Philadelnow the Republican party has to pass the | phia Press and the United States Gazette trying ordeal of success; and the history of have pronounced for a conservative Adminformeranti-Bemecratic Administrations does | istration, and a large pack of the smaller

It is peculiarly interesting, also, to see a journal like the Cincinnati Commercial, which, before election, was filled with intalk about conciliation and a conservative flammatory appeals to "vote for freedom," now declaring that the conservative sentiment of the country demands that the Administration shall not be aggressive upon the institutions of any of the States. If a journot conciliation nor conservatism. They nal had a political idea distinct enough to make it competent to turn State's evidence in this way against its own party, it might be interesting to inquire how Mr. Lincoln's Administration could be aggressive upon the institutions of the States. Mr. Corwin, also, some time since resurrected from the tomb of the Fillmore Administration, and looking, tration than it will probably be-that of John like Alexander, for more worlds to conquer, Q. Adams; and it will have to depend for its has come forward as spokesman for the Lincoln Administration, and promises that it shall be conservative. Virtually placing it in the criminal's box, he pleads guilty for it, and promises reformation.

If these would be organs should stop to get an idea in their heads before they give of the party, while there is no positive policy | tongue, how could they specify what they either laid down or that can be proposed or call a conservative course? There is nothing carried out. The platform is as blind as a that can be done or left undone, for or against the institutions of any States. No are really no positive measures practicable or policy can be laid down as conservative or radical, for there is nothing that can be done or proposed. But what the greater part of these conservatives mean is, that Mr. Lincoln shall give the offices to a faction inside be endured where it is-and opposed to its the Republican party; and rather more hosextension Into Territories. But it is not tile to it than the Democracy, who call agreed on the measures for preventing its, themselves conservatives; and shall take them as his advisers, with such new converts tory now which needs their application, nor as official patronage will bring to him, and shall turn the cold shoulder to what these conservatives call radical, that is active and working Republicans.

This is what is meant by a conservative Administration; and this the common infirmity of humanity will probably carry Mr. Lincoln into. This kind of conservatism abolition of slavery in the District of Co- will be to give the cold shoulder to such lumbia, which used to be a great object in men as Seward, Chase, Wade, C. M. Whig times, and which is a part of the Abo- Clay and Trumbull, and take into his lition capital now, is the merest bagatelle, of councils such men as Corwin and Ewno sort of value as an Abolition feat, even if ing, and other fossils from the North, it were practicable, which it is not. Slavery who have been recently revived into can not be abolished in the District without an appearance of animation by the proscompensating the owners. This, like all | peet that Republicanism would have cakes Government purchases, especially in the Dis- and ale in its gift. People in Ohio need no trict, would be at fabulous prices, and the prophet to tell them the result of this con-Government would find a most fabulous in- servatism. It would dissolve the Republican, crease in their numbers. It would only be much quicker than John Tyler did the Whig offering a great premium on all the worthless party. It would be the identical course negroes of the surrounding States. And which Tyler and Fillmore pursued, and when bought, what would the Government | would end the same way. Yet this is the do with them? Most of the States exclude | course that the journalistic wisdom of the ree negroes. What State would take them | country is pointing out for Mr. Lincoln, and if they were exiled? and what right have the one he will be most likely to pursue. States which exclude free negroes to put His Administration will probably be a slight them on the District? The proposition is an interregnum in Democratic rule; just long absurdity; and, even if it were not totally enough to bury its feuds. An overwhelming victory will bring back its ancient prestige; and the fresh distribution of the whole patronage of the Government, without any of the disaffection which follows when one Democratic Administration succeeds another of the same party, will restore and establish tory of freedom." American Humor. "Artemus Ward" has got into Vanity Fair As that paper makes rather high pretensions in humor and wit, and really has much merit, this new feature is worthy of comment. It is generally supposed that humor Mr. Lincoln or Mr. Seward are now. So must have some foundation in human character and peculiarities, or incidents. Here we have a showman. To be sure, there are living showmen; and this is the only living feature in the Artemus-Ward papers. This is an impossible showman; but let that pass. The idea of a showman's correspondence is a humorous one, and Barnum's literary performance helps it. But here we have an impossible showman telling of incidents utterly impossible and office. People are always law-abiding when unnatural, and whose only suspicion of humor consists in their impossibility, told in an impossible gibberish, laboriously misspelled into the most distorted shape. Incibered that the most heart-rending outcries | dents totally unnatural, not having the least shadow of a connection with human na ture, written in a language which no body writes, and with an orthography as far as possible from what an ignorant man would make. In short, it is a humorous effort without a particle of human nature or human probability in it. Aside from this, its chief features are a paucity of ideas and expressions, and its endless repetitions of a few current flash phrases.

Thackeray, in his "Yellowplush Papers, made a very humorous work of the experience and style of language and imaginary spelling of the footman; but the style was founded on fact; the incidents were only an exaggeration upon probable events, and the spelling was what a stylish flunkey would naturally fall into. The Artemus-Ward papers are just the reverse of this. If humorous, it is humor with human nature left out. It has not the claim of novelty, for the exaggerated-spelling wit has been considerably worn. It may be that American humor is so barren that the standard of a paper devoted to wit and humor will have to come to this. It may be also that it will suit the popular taste and prove profitable to the paper, in which case it is good enough.

A Serious Defect in Northern Character The South Carolina performance is intended to scare the Presidential Electors from easting their votes according to the decision of the people. It seems almost incredible that such a project can be seriously entertained, but the play of fright has become too common an element in our polities to leave any doubt on this head. The demonstrations will be carefully timed so as not to require any overt act, nor any thing that can not be backed out of, until after the tration. Petriodish and concession is very secting of the electors; and then, till after well, but it single him no aid from the fig., the counting of the vota in Congress; and positions can be also be a party and positions.

nite postponemen This frightening performance brings to mind an incident which occurred in a Justice's court. A "rough" was brought up to testify against a liquor-seller, Being in favor of free trade in liquor, and having himself consumed, or been consumed by, the liquor in question, he refused to bear witness. Upon this the Magistrate, with awful dignity, inquired if he was aware of the serious consequences that he would incur it he refused to answer the question, and sternly ordered him to answer immediately. *Look here, 'Squire," said the imperturbable witness, "before we go any further, you might as well understand that I don't scare worth a damn." The South ought to have learned by the Presidential election that the North don't scare worth a-the aforesaid.

If any have a curiosity to know who of the Cincinnati traders are full of business, let them see who advertise in the Pauss, We have seen this so well established, through the summer and fall, that we know that our advertisers will substantiate it albeit they may be quite willing to keep this placer to themselves. Compared with the extent of the business in this city, the number of advertisers is very small. There are a few who advertise regularly and systematically, and they have reaped large rewards from it. Advertising in this city is a rich mine, to a great extent unworked. No investment offers so great returns to the business man, nor offers a surer reward for enterprise.

The merits of the Paess as an advertising medium are apparent on a very slight reflection. Its small size displays its advertisements vastly better, as it brings them all within a glance; while its circulation in this city exceeds that of any other paper, saying nothing of Covington and Newport, where its circulation equals that of all the other Cincinnati papers put together. We might also include Columbus, Indianapolis, Ports mouth and other distant towns, where the proportion is the same. And, we might also mention that the Paras circulates among people who read and think, and they are the kind that do most of the trading.
